

ABSTRACT

A system and method for gathering information off-line to bring merchants on-line. The system employs a sales force to gather and collect information from the merchants. The information is then used to create a "storefront", an on-line store, such as a web page. Merchandise sold by the merchants is then made available to users of the newly created web page.